Planning a BBQ this summer?

Here's how to make sure that you keep your dog safe and still enjoy the summer sunshine.

BBQ hazards - Party food

There are certain foods common at BBQ's that really are dangerous for dogs.

Cooked bones: Never give a dog a bone from the BBQ. These can get stuck in the dog's digestive tract and have to be removed surgically. Even worse, bones can cause serious and potentially life threatening damage to guts.

Corn on the cob: Another food to be wary of is corn on the cob. These can be swallowed whole by some dogs, and are just the right size to cause an intestinal obstruction.

Kebab: A real hazard, which you may find unbelievable, is the humble kebab. Unfortunately to some dogs, the attraction of the sizzling meat is impossible to resist! Dogs have been known to swallow kebabs whole - skewer and all! This can cause damage to the gut and requires major surgery.

BBQ hazards - Hot BBQ

Do not leave a barbecue unattended where a pet may be tempted to jump up. This is especially likely if food is cooking. However, even the debris left behind on a still hot BBQ grid is alluring to most dogs. This could result in severe burns to them and others in the vicinity, if they pull it over.

BBQ Hazards - Heatstroke

When there is a lot going on at a party, it is easy to lose track of where the pets have got to. Make sure that they can't get shut in the conservatory or green house; these can reach dangerous temperatures in warm weather. If you do suspect that your dog is suffering from heatstroke, ring your vet for advice immediately as this can be a life threatening condition.

Success Story "The Pip Experience!"

Back in May 2018, I was desperate for a dog. I had a dog in the house my entire life, but since moving out of my parents home, my house was too quiet. I was adamant that I wanted a Labrador, but also that I wanted a rescue dog, which is a rare combination. I got to the point that I wasn't particularly bothered about the breed, but just that I needed a dog of my own. This is when I was pointed in the direction of Pip, a young and excitable whippet-cross. When I met her for the first time, her little tail was wagging as she licked me nearly from head to toe, I knew then that I'd be taking her home.

The last year has certainly been an education... Visiting the vets because of a demolished pack of Jaffa Cakes (lesson 1 - the dining table is not a safe area). Having to break into my own house because of an inconveniently placed antler bone underneath the door (lesson 2 - always carry a full toolbox). Being woken up with a paw or four in my face (lesson 3 - never leave the stairgate open). Harnesses are easy to escape from (lesson 4 - sighthounds have very odd body dimensions, which don't seem to be well catered for in the harness department... Also, really need to improve the recall!) The main thing I've learned for which I have far too many examples, is that silence is deadly! Lastly, I'd say that perceptions about breeds aren't the be-all and end-all, I certainly never thought I'd have a dog so small. Yes, a lab might have been easier to train, but likely wouldn't have given us half the laughs!

Fast forward a year, and she's fitted in a treat. As she's getting older, she's calming down a lot, which has been a bit of a relief.

Although I do enjoy the 20+ mile walks to tire her out.

Being a typical short haired sighthound, nothing pleases her more than heat, so, when we installed a log burner in the living room, it was the best day of her life! She barely moves when the fire is lit.

Lastly, I wouldn't change a thing! Another happy customer of Cliff Top Kennels Re-homing Centre. I can't thank you enough for the little reprobate of a dog.

Five top tips to keep your dog cool

1. Water, water, everywhere!

Dogs don't sweat in order to control their body temperature, so the only way they can cool down is by panting. But just as we get dehydrated through perspiring, dogs also require extra liquid when they are panting to cool down. Make sure there are plenty of dog bowls around the house and outside in the shade, to help keep your pooch hydrated.

2. Walk your dog at the coolest time of the day.

It makes sense not to walk your dog during the hottest parts of the day, but leave long walks for early morning and late evening. And a good tip to remember is that if the pavement is too hot for bare feet, it's too hot for little paws!

3. A nice shady spot.

Some dogs, such as those with white coats, can be more susceptible to sunburn, so keeping out of direct sunlight as far as possible will minimise the risk. If your dog has the run of the garden, make sure he has access to shady spots and watch out for where he chooses to rest. Some dogs will lie out and fall asleep in the full sun!

4. Travelling.

Unless you really need to, or your car has air conditioning, avoid taking your dog out in the car when the weather is hot. It goes without saying you should never leave your dog in the car even on cooler summer days, but with soaring temperatures, a dog won't stand a chance trapped in a car.

5. Take it slow.

Some dogs will still want to run and run even on a very hot day, so you need to remind him to slow down and take plenty of breaks on your walks. Young and energetic dogs will still tend to charge around in the heat, but they will feel the effects just the same and heat stroke can come on quickly - don't let dogs chase around like mad hatters when the sun is scorching, and make sure you have access to water when you are out and about.

Symptoms of Heat Stroke in Dogs

Keep an eye out for signs that your dog might be dehydrated - dogs cannot sweat and can only cool down by panting, so a dog that begins to drool, has bloodshot eyes, and/ or is lethargic may well be over heated. Other symptoms may be enlargement of the tongue, red gums or lips and an obvious state of anxiety or weakness.

Unless a high temperature is not brought down, a dog can start to show more severe symptoms of heat trauma and these may include, very rapid heart rate, trembling or seizure, difficult breathing, vomiting and coma.

Prompt action must follow to relieve the high temperature before the dog is transported to the vet. If the dog is not in the shade - remove him to a cooler spot. Place him on a cold wet towel. Bathe the dog in lukewarm water paying attention to the underneath of the dog, his feet and his 'underarm' area. Do not use very cold water as a sudden change in temperature can be dangerous. Use a cooling fan if possible. Once the dog is cooler it is essential to have him checked out at the vets to make sure there has been no internal damage.
